Reflection

In today's Gospel, Jesus speaks words that are both reassuring and challenging. He tells us clearly that he has not come to abolish the Law given through Moses, but to bring it to its fullness. In other words, God's Law is not discarded; it is deepened, purified, and perfected in the person of Jesus.

In the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew presents a series of teachings in which Jesus boldly says, "You have heard it said...but I say to you." With these words, Jesus reveals his divine authority and invites us to move beyond a merely legal or external obedience. Faith, for Jesus, is not about doing the bare minimum to avoid sin; it is about allowing God to transform the human heart.

Jesus addresses everyday realities: anger, desire, broken relationships, and honesty in speech. He teaches that it is not enough to avoid violence—we must seek reconciliation and uproot resentment from our hearts. It is not enough to avoid immoral actions—we are called to purity of heart and intention. It is not enough to follow social or legal customs—we must honour the sacredness of commitment and the dignity of persons. And it is not enough to speak truth only when bound by an oath—we are called to be people whose words are always trustworthy.

These teachings are demanding, but they are also life-giving. Jesus is not placing heavy burdens on us; he is showing us the path to authentic freedom and deeper love. As a Stella Maris community, we are invited this week to reflect honestly: where is God calling me to go beyond the letter of the law and live its spirit? In Christ, the Law becomes not a burden, but a way of love.
